Is it really halal?

A 2-minute guide to checking halal certification and finding halal food, in Malaysia and abroad.

Spot-check a product or restaurant

Tick what you can see. The bar shows how confident you can be.

- [ ] The official halal logo is displayed
  In Malaysia, look for the JAKIM or state religious department logo.
- [ ] A certificate number is shown
  Restaurants should display the certificate, with the premises name and address.
- [ ] The certificate hasn't expired
  Check the validity date on the certificate itself.
- [ ] I found it in the official halal directory
  Search the company or product name online (see links below).

Start ticking to see your result.

How to check a halal certificate

Tap a step to open it.

Step 1: Find the logo and certificate −

Look at the packaging or the shop entrance. A genuine certificate lists the company name, the premises or product covered, a certificate number and an expiry date.

Step 2: Search the official directory +

Step 3: Compare the details +

Good to know +

Tap to learn: myth or fact?

FACT

Halal also covers how meat is slaughtered, cross-contact and ingredients such as alcohol-based flavourings.

FACT

Certificates expire and logos can be copied. Check the validity date.

FACT

It also applies to food premises, cosmetics, pharmaceuticals and more.

Useful links

Official sources and apps. Tap to open.

Halal Malaysia Portal (JAKIM)
Official halal portal and directory search

JAKIM official website
Department of Islamic Development Malaysia

MyeHALAL
Halal certification system

Zabihah
Find halal restaurants and markets worldwide

HalalTrip
Halal food and prayer spaces when you travel

Want the full design?

See our poster on Canva.

Open the Canva design

Share this guide

Scan to open this page on another phone.

Always confirm details with the official sources above. Information can change.